

TODAY WAS ELKS' DAY

Many Lodges Represented From Different Cities.

The Monster Parade This Afternoon Was Over a Mile Long--Coshocton Will be Awarded the Fine New Flag--Carnival Notes.

Today was indeed the banner day of the week, of the Elks' reunion and free carnival, and was on the program as "Elks' Day." The reception committees were at work early and with the Buckeye band marched to the Pan Handle depot at 7 o'clock to meet the first delegations to arrive in Newark. There were delegations from Uhrichsville, Newcomerstown and Coshocton, and they were headed by the Hyperion Cornet band of Newcomerstown. C. A. Lamberson of Coshocton, county auditor, chaperoned the delegations. Coshocton sent a fine delegation of 140 Elks and prominent citizens, including Exalted Ruler T. J. Hanley of Coshocton Lodge.

The Coshocton boys are after the fine silk banner, and their showings makes them formidable competitors. Zanesville's delegation arrived at 9 o'clock on the B. & O., while a special on the Buckeye Lake about 10:30 brought the delegation from Columbus.

The B. & O. brought the Mt. Vernon and Mansfield people about noon. The attendance at the Elks' Carnival Wednesday exceeded even the big Labor Day crowds, and from all indications the attendance will continue to increase.

Each and every attraction continues to draw its share of the liberal patronage, and the shows without exception are giving entire satisfaction.

One of the very best shows on the street of the carnival is the "Girl From Up There," and at every performance there is a large crowd in the tent who give expression to appreciation and approval by liberal applause. The singing of illustrated songs, and the serpentine dance with calcium effect is everything that is claimed for it. Everyone should see the "Girl From Up There," beautiful, refined and pleasing.

Esau the ape man, continues to draw large crowds whose expressions of wonder and amazement are heard on every side as they come out from seeing this wonderful creature who does everything except talk, and he is learning to do that.

The Cingalese is another of the best shows. Here one may see the natives of the island of Ceylon. Their dances are a part of their religion, and are the very poetry of motion.

They are one of the strongest drawing cards, and a visit to their village will interest you.

"In fair Japan" continues in the popularity that the first two days brought to this feature of the carnival, and each performance is attended by big crowds. The acrobatic acts, juggling and sleight of hand are the best ever seen in Newark.

A ride on the Ferris wheel, a trip on the merry go round, a visit to the dog, pony and monkey show, and the many other attractions will repay any one.

The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, one of the largest and most popular and most rapidly increasing secret societies in the world, was founded in New York City, February 18, 1868. The founders of this order, like the founders of many other organizations, builded wisely and greater than they knew. Chas. Vivian, the celebrated English baritone with a few other members of the theatrical and operatic professions, were the founders of the order, and their original intention was to make the new organization merely a sort of social club and its membership was restricted to the members of the theatrical and operatic professions.

The original name of the order was "The Jolly Corks" and the organization of the association was by members of "The theatrical, minstrel, musical, equestrian and literary professions, and others who sympathized with the objects in view."

The order today is marked by the strong social features that characterized its first inception, but it has been grown beyond the early beginning and is now a benevolent and protective association, with all the best features found in the best secret societies.

The name was soon changed to "The Order of Elks," and it was made a distinctively American organization. To be an Elk the applicant must believe in a Supreme Being. He must be twenty-one years of age; in good health and with visible means of support, and he must be an American citizen. Flattering propositions have been made from time to time to extend the order into Europe, and other parts of the old world, but these have been steadily refused, it being the unalterable policy of the order to keep it a distinctively American organization. The Order of Elks has grown in the short time of thirty-four years from nothing in 1868 to an organization of over 800 lodges, with a membership of 100,000, extending into nearly all the states of the Union. Ohio, in Elksdom, as in everything else, is the banner state, having the largest membership of any state in the Union, comprised of over seventy lodges, with a membership that runs up into the thousands.

At the recent annual session of the Grand Lodge, which is the National Lodge of the order, held in Salt Lake City, the order took another grand step forward in establishing a magnificent Elks' Home in Bedford, Virginia, where the aged and indigent members of the order will be cared for.

The Order of Elks numbers among its members some of the most prominent and illustrious men in all the walks of life, business, professional and artistic, in the United States, and it naturally attracts to its membership large numbers of the brightest and best men in every community. Distinctively American, the order is as broad in its sympathy and its charity as humanity itself. It sees in every man a brother, and when the hour of eleven comes its loving heart remembers not only the brothers of the order present, but the absent brothers also—those absent in other climes, and those who have passed into the great beyond. It writes the faults of its members upon the sand, but their virtues upon the tablets of love and memory. Its white and purple banner, ever draped by the American flag, bears the glorious motto of "Charity, Justice, Brotherly Love and Fidelity." Its aim and object is to make the world brighter and better and all mankind happier.

Newark Lodge, 391, E. P. O. E., under whose auspices the annual Ohio State Reunion and Carnival of Elks is being held here, was instituted on the 22nd of March 1888. The great flood, which raised the water higher in Newark and the surrounding country than had been known for years, came during the same night that the lodge was instituted, but there is not supposed to be any logical connection between the two events.

Newark Lodge was instituted by Deputy Grand Exalted Ruler Charles Carey Waddell, of Chillicothe, who was assisted in the work by the Zanesville Lodge of Elks. The work of institution was performed in the lodge room of Newark Lodge No. 12, Knights of Pythias, which continued to be the home of the new lodge for about two years, when they removed to their new and elegant quarters, which occupy two floors of the Orin block, over the city postoffice and which were especially prepared for them.

Their quarters comprise the lodge room proper, with various ante-rooms, a large banquet hall and kitchen, a fine amusement hall for billiards, etc., a commodious reception room and a beautiful parlor. These rooms are all appropriately and even luxuriously furnished and are said by travelers to be among the most commodious and handsome in the State and represent an investment of several thousand dollars.

The new lodge was organized with a membership of over 40, which has now grown to 150 members, composed of representatives of the leading business and professional men of the city, as the following list indicates:

FOUND DEAD

Man and Wife Discovered in a Cemetery at Jamestown, Ohio—Both Were Shot.

Jamestown, O., Sept. 4.—The dead bodies of Charles Bond, a respected citizen of Frankford, Ohio, and his wife, Minnie, were yesterday discovered lying together by Andrew Gordon, a laborer, who was gathering clover in the cemetery.

A 22-calibre revolver was found between them and appearances would indicate that he had shot his wife before he ended his own life.

She was lying on her right side, her head and shoulders resting on a newspaper. In her right hand was a handkerchief. Bond was lying on his back.

The revolver showed that three shots were fired, one entering her head through the mouth. Brown was shot through the temple.

The couple arrived here Sunday and registered at the Collins hotel. They were seen walking about town and late Monday afternoon the sexton saw them in the cemetery.

The bodies which were sent to Frankford, had been lying in the cemetery for fully 24 hours.

Bond was in Columbus up to last Saturday. He has made his home with Mrs. Alice Goldsberry at 333 Lexington avenue, who is a sister of the dead man. Mr. Bond left the place last Saturday with the intention of going back to Frankford to meet his wife. Mr. Bond has been in ill health for three years, suffering from lung trouble and mental aberration.

Mr. Bond was 39 years old and was married only last April.

RECEPTION

Of President Roosevelt in Columbus, on October 6—A Stay of Only Two Hours.

Columbus, O., Sept. 4.—The special committee appointed by President Jeffrey of the board of trade, to arrange for the reception to President Roosevelt on the morning of October 6 held a meeting Wednesday morning in the board of trade rooms and prepared a program of entertainment for the distinguished guest.

Governor Nash on Tuesday received a telegram from Secretary Cortelyou in which the information was given that the President would arrive in Columbus at 8:30 a. m. on October 6, and remain here for two hours, leaving at 10:30. The telegram asks for the name of the chairman of the local entertainment committee and further requests that a copy of the provisional program be furnished to the President by telegraph. The communication concludes by stating that the itinerary and time allowance for each point must be closely adhered to.

The committee on Wednesday formulated a program of entertainment for the President, but before making the same public will telegraph for approval. It is understood that the program contemplates a drive about the city, and other functions, which can be carried out in two hours. Just where the public reception, if any, is to be held is not stated, but it is intimated that it will take place at the capitol.

In his telegram to Governor Nash, the President expresses himself in favor of a public meeting with the reception feature barred. In this event the only probable place for such a gathering would be in the auditorium on Goodale street.

There is supposed to be a calculus formation in the kidneys which may have to be removed. As his emipence is nearly 70 years old, such an operation might possibly be attended with some danger. The obstruction, however, his physicians think, may pass off without giving further trouble. He has led a very temperate and even abstemious life and his general health is excellent.

BADLY BURNED

POURED GASOLINE ON FIRE INSTEAD OF COAL OIL.

Arms of Miss Lila Darnes Burned to Crisp—Her Grandmother and Aunt Also Burned.

A terrible accident occurred at the home of Mr. Thomas Darnes, 79 Summit street, about noon today, by which three people were badly burned. Miss Lila Darnes, the only daughter of Mr. Darnes had started to build a fire in the cook stove for the purpose of preparing dinner. She had poured out a small quantity of what she supposed was coal oil into a cup and then dashed the fluid on the fuel in the stove. The fluid, however, was gasoline instead of coal oil and when it came in contact with the embers of the fire it immediately blazed up, setting her clothing on fire, and burning one arm to a crisp to the shoulder, and the other to the elbow.

Her grandmother, Mrs. H. J. Jones of Narvath, and her aunt, Mrs. Samuels, of this city, who were visiting at the Darnes home, sprang to the relief of the girl, and with their bare hands endeavored to extinguish the fire, and in their efforts both were badly burned.

CONGRATULATIONS

Extended to Roosevelt on His Escape From Serious Injury--Secretary Cortelyou's Shock.

Oyster Bay, Sept. 4.—President Roosevelt is today receiving congratulations on his escape from serious injuries in the accident at Pittsfield, Mass., yesterday. When he retired last night he had just begun to feel the effects of the severe shock which, coupled with the fatigue from his long and active New England tour, made him very sore and a weary man. He gave orders that he be allowed to rest until 10 o'clock this morning without interruption. Secretary Cortelyou was the worst injured of any of the party not killed, except Driver Pratt. He is now at his home at Hempstead, L. I., suffering from nervous shock and a painful cut.

Oyster Bay, Sept. 4.—11 a. m.—When the President appeared about his home this morning it was noticed that his face was still badly swollen and his right eye was in deep mourning. The President is going ahead today with preparations for his southern trip just as if nothing had happened. There will be absolutely no change in the program.

The President will have the grand duke Boris of Russia lunch with him today and will start on his southern and western tour tomorrow.

KAISER'S CONGRATULATIONS.

Washington, Sept. 4.—Among the messages of congratulations received here upon the escape from death of President Roosevelt is the following from Emperor William of Germany:

Pittsburg, Pa., Sept. 4.—"An extra session of the legislature would cost the state less money than it is costing to maintain the militia in the anthracite region to prevent and suppress riots."

In these words Governor W. A. Stone indicated to a few of his friends during his visit here his purpose to call an extra session of the Pennsylvania legislature and try to end the anthracite coal strike. Mr. Stone is said to believe that by this means an end to the strike could be made in less than thirty days.

The plan he proposes is a compulsory arbitration law. Under a careful study of the principle of the plan, he thought out a scheme which he has prepared, a committee appointed under his proposed new law would arbitrate the strike whether the strikers or the operators were willing or not. Ample provision will be made to compel both sides to accept the award.

Governor Stone is confirmed in his belief that his compulsory arbitration law would stand the most severe tests in the courts. The principle which will be involved to compel parties to the great labor dispute to submit third parties to pass upon their respective rights is that the general public right is greater than those of either. The courts have repeatedly upheld this principle.

The scheme involves a sweeping application of the principle of the plan, both against capital and labor.

GREAT MUSIC HALL

Cincinnati's Pride, Partially Destroyed by Fire--The Odeon Completely Wrecked.

Cincinnati, Ohio, Sept. 4.—A fire, which cost $5,000, was burned, which started at 4:50 this morning. The fire spread rapidly and the firemen who responded with 22 engines, had one of the hardest tasks of their experience to confine the blaze to the Lyceum and College of Music building, the southeast corner of the Music Hall proper. The latter building was not greatly damaged. The Odeon is a wreck and will probably have to be rebuilt.

VERMONT ELECTION

Complete Returns Show the Governorship Will Have to be Determined by the Legislature.

Montpelier, Vt., Sept. 4.—Complete returns from the state election show the following vote for governor: General John McCullough, Republican, 31,778; Felix W. Gettryeck, Democratic, 7,240; Percival W. Clement, high license, Republican, 28,117; Joel O. Sherburn, Prohibition, 2,325. The returns confirm the prediction that the election will go to the state legislature.

"With all America I praise Providence that saved your life from the terrible accident. (Signed.) William I. R."

ARREST

Of the Motorman of the Trolley Car That Crashed Into the President's Carriage.

Pittsfield, Mass., Sept. 4.—Euclid Madden, motorman of the trolley car, which crashed into the carriage containing President Roosevelt, Governor Crane and Secret Service Guard Wm. Craig will be arraigned in court today. James Kelley, the conductor, will also have a hearing.

Madden and Kelley were arrested immediately after the accident but did not remain long in jail. J. P. Dolan, manager of the railway company and Madden's brother going on their bail bond for $5,000 and $2,500 respectively.

A strict inquiry will be made as to the responsibility for the accident that so nearly robbed the nation of its head. The report that the motorman was offered a financial reward to get to the country club ahead of the President still prevails and has aroused general indignation.

The company is also censured for running cars in the face of the edict of Mayor England, asking that car traffic be suspended until after the President had passed. The mandate was obeyed by the Berkshire street railway, but the Pittsfield company ignored it as the accident shows.

EXTRA SESSION

Of the Pennsylvania Legislature May Be Called to Settle the Coal Strike.

Pittsburg, Pa., Sept. 4.—"An extra session of the legislature would cost the state less money than it is costing to maintain the militia in the anthracite region to prevent and suppress riots."

In these words Governor W. A. Stone indicated to a few of his friends during his visit here his purpose to call an extra session of the Pennsylvania legislature and try to end the anthracite coal strike. ### PLAYING ROBIN.

A True Story of How Two Little Girls Got Enough Cherries.

Grandpa saw the two little girls walking toward the cherry tree. "Don't pick my cherries," said he sharply as he hurried into the house.

The little girls looked soberly at each other, then at the beautiful cherry tree.

"Let's go to the barn," said Jessie. "Let's play under the cherry tree," said Beatrice. "We needn't pick his old cherries."

"I can climb this tree!" cried Jessie. "So can I," said Beatrice, "just as easy. Let us do it and play we are robins."

They fetched a long fence board and placed one end against the tree and so managed to scramble at last upon the large branches. Here they sat, swinging their feet and singing, for several happy minutes. But above them, high in the tree, the cherries looked red, much redder than they had looked from the ground.

"I tell you what," said Beatrice. "Let's climb up to that bough yonder, and we can reach up and eat cherries like robins do. Then grandpa will never know. I think grandpa is selfish."

Jessie looked first at Beatrice and then at the cherries. "He is selfish," she said. And the two girls climbed higher and soon were pulling down the twigs with their shining fruit.

It was slow work for the eager little mouths to eat the pulp and leave the pits and stems on the twigs, but they ate a great many cherries. The breeze blew the branch out of their reach, and, stretching up to catch it, one girl lost her footing and fell against the other. The slender branch snapped, and down through the boughs they crashed to the ground.

"Oh, oh, oh!" they screamed. "I'm most killed!" wailed Beatrice. "My foot is all broke to pieces!" cried Jessie. They could not rise for pain.

Grandpa ran to them. "Oh, I see," said he sternly, but after helping Beatrice to the house he carried Jessie to her home. Each had a sprained ankle, which kept them indoors for more than a week.

When Jessie came to see Beatrice for the first time after the accident, the two little girls sat soberly on the porch. They looked at the beautiful cherry tree with its broken limb.

"I don't want to play robin, do you?" asked Jessie. "No," said Beatrice, "and I don't want cherries when grandpa says not. They were not ripe."

"No," said Jessie; "I was awful sick of 'em."

"I was, too," chimed in Beatrice. "I believe I most died!"

"Your grandpa wasn't selfish," said Jessie.

"No, indeed," assented Beatrice. They looked at the tree and gave a great sigh.

"Well," said Jessie cheerfully, "let's go to the barn and play we are best!" And away they ran.—Edna G. Hawley in Brooklyn Eagle.

HOW HE WORKED UP.

Story of the Boyhood of One Who Is Now a Famous Astronomer.

One day many years ago a bright boy found employment in a photographic gallery in Nashville, Tenn. His wages were small, but he took good care of them, and in course of time he had saved up a snug little sum of money. One day a friend, less thrifty than he, came to him with a long face and asked for a loan of money, offering a book as security. Although the other knew there was little probability of his ever being repaid, he could not refuse the request.

"Here is the money. Keep your book and repay me when you can," said the lender.

The grateful lad went away in such haste that he left the book behind. The kind youth examined the volume with curiosity. It was a work on astronomy by Lick, and it so fascinated him that he sat up all night studying it. He had never had anything which so filled him with delight. He determined to learn all that he could about the wonders of the heavens and began thenceforth to read everything he could obtain relating to astronomy.

The next step was to buy a small spyglass, and night after night he spent most of the hours on the roof of his house studying the stars. He secured, second hand, the tube of a large spyglass, into which he fitted an eyepiece, and sent to Philadelphia for an object glass. By and by he obtained a five inch glass, which, as you know, is an instrument of considerable size.

Meanwhile he worked faithfully in the shop of the photographer, but his nights brought him rare delight, for he never wearied of tracing out the wonders and marvels of the worlds around us. With the aid of his large spyglass he discovered two comets before they were seen by any of the professional astronomers, whose superior instruments were continually scanning the heavens in search of the celestial wanderers. This exploit, you may well suppose, made the boy famous.

He was invited by the professors in Vanderbilt university to go thither and see what he could do with their six inch telescope. In the course of the following four years he discovered six comets. He was next engaged by the Lick observatory. With the aid of its magnificent instrument he discovered eight comets and last summer astonished the world by discovering the fifth satellite of Jupiter. He invented a new method of photographing the nebulae in the Milky way and has shown an originality approaching genius in his work in star photography. Perhaps you have already guessed the name of this famous astronomer, which is Professor E. E. Barnard, now in charge of the Yerkes observatory of Chicago university, and this is the story of how he worked up.—Chicago Record-Herald.

NEW WOOLEN STUFFS.

How They May Be Made Into Handsome Suits.

[Special Correspondence.]

New York, Sept. 1.—For the coming season we find beautiful silk and wool fabrics in the shape of broadcloth poplins. Some of these are thin and almost transparent, so that a bright colored lining shows through indistinctly, but still enough to afford a dainty and evanescent glimpse of the underlying color. Many more of them are thick, as is usual with poplins and such other half and half material. Some of them are simply broadcloth black, but others have tufted figures in white and different colors.

There are also many woolen veillings with iridescent effects, and these, like the thin poplins, are to be made over linings of different color. When these are well chosen, they are beautiful.

These light wool veillings will be worn quite late in the season, the fact of their being wool making them suitable for marked difference in temperature.

Silk as well as the poplin has the same kind of design, and in some patterns one sees a line of white threads which are thrown to the surface like stitches, making a stripe. At intervals along the stripes are small brocade figures in black. Tufts are also among the designs, and a black taffeta with lines of white tufts makes a handsome and striking gown. This tufted black silk is never seen in any other combination than the black and white. A new weave in silk is what is called natte, or braided.

Among the silks for the fall and winter are the ever beautiful cheney effects and pompadour as well as rich brocade satin. Naturally these will be for indoor dresses for more or less festive occasions.

The new woolen stuffs are very rough and very coarse, but are undeniably stylish. The mesh is thick and the thread uneven. Stripes of a much thicker thread in a different color are run through, giving a tufted surface, really stylish. Other designs have a graduated series of lines in contrasting color, most of the lines being broken. Where the colors are gray and brown the stuff is very desirable, though there are no end of other combinations of colors.

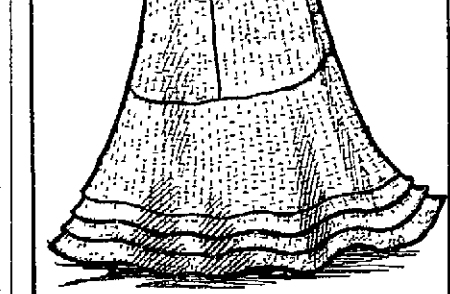

One design has the ground of a dark gray, somewhat like homespun, with lines of white-like tufts forming stripes. Other patterns show a surface even, but rough, in two tints of the same color. Grays and black and blacks and white are the handsomest of all and will doubtless be the favorites. There are some regular Oxford checks in the same rough weaves and numbers of small checks in different colors and weights. Covert and chevrons of all kinds in soft and pleasing shades are seen. Browns mixed with gray, black and sometimes in several colors so interwoven that one cannot single out one of them are handsome when properly made up.

One of these chevrot dresses, or more properly suits, since the waist part is a short and jaunty jacket, is of fawn and brown mixture in tiny broken plaid. The skirt is made with one shape flounce to which three narrow bias bands are set and held just full enough at the top to flare out the bottom like ruffles. The seams are what is known as the slot seam, which means that they are folded and stitched each side of an underfold. At the bottom of the bands are rows of very narrow soutache braid and above three rows of stitching in black silk. Brown velvet or braid could be used, and some would like it better. The jacket is snug in the back with the center of the small basque slashed, while the fronts are made to close with a 4x4 and four buttons or be left open, according to a woman's taste.

This particular skirt is cut in five cores and fastens in the seam of the front width invisibly. The blouse can be of almost any color, as the material is so neutral in tint.

Many suits, particularly those of smooth faced, solid colored material like venetian, cloth, cravenette and fine etamine, will have coats half fitting in three-quarter lengths. These will have half flowing sleeves and wide collars trimmed with lace or applique. They can be quite plain for ordinary wear and transformed at once by the addition of the wide and ornamental collar with its many ended bows of ribbon down the front. They are for the days between furs and long wraps. Capes in military form will be worn by very many.

OLIVE HARPER.

NEW CHEVIOT SUIT.

These light wool veillings will be worn quite late in the season, the fact of their being wool making them suitable for marked difference in temperature.

Silk as well as the poplin has the same kind of design, and in some patterns one sees a line of white threads which are thrown to the surface like stitches, making a stripe. At intervals along the stripes are small brocade figures in black. Tufts are also among the designs, and a black taffeta with lines of white tufts makes a handsome and striking gown. This tufted black silk is never seen in any other combination than the black and white. A new weave in silk is what is called natte, or braided.

Among the silks for the fall and winter are the ever beautiful cheney effects and pompadour as well as rich brocade satin. Naturally these will be for indoor dresses for more or less festive occasions.

The new woolen stuffs are very rough and very coarse, but are undeniably stylish. The mesh is thick and the thread uneven. Stripes of a much thicker thread in a different color are run through, giving a tufted surface, really stylish. Other designs have a graduated series of lines in contrasting color, most of the lines being broken. Where the colors are gray and brown the stuff is very desirable, though there are no end of other combinations of colors.

One design has the ground of a dark gray, somewhat like homespun, with lines of white-like tufts forming stripes. Other patterns show a surface even, but rough, in two tints of the same color. Grays and black and blacks and white are the handsomest of all and will doubtless be the favorites. There are some regular Oxford checks in the same rough weaves and numbers of small checks in different colors and weights. Covert and chevrons of all kinds in soft and pleasing shades are seen. (Pataskala Standard.)

Hon. J. W. Cassingham was nominated for Congress by the Democrats of this Seventeenth Congressional district at Coshocton, last Thursday.

Mr. Cassingham is a stronger man at the present time than when nominated for his first term. We owe it to him to say that he recognizes neither creed nor political affiliation when dealing with his constituents, and is kindly courteous at all times. The writer remembers with pleasure his little "visit" with Mr. Cassingham at Washington a few months since, and the latter's interest in our new free rural routes. It was, mainly, through his insistence that these routes were put in operation at this time.

THE PARADE

This Afternoon Was Over a Mile in Length.

The formal opening of the State Convention of Ohio Elks was preceded by a monster parade in which all visiting delegations participated. This feature was planned and executed under the direction of the committee consisting of Walter Scott, chairman, John H. Swisher, and W. E. Fulton, and was the best of its kind ever given in Newark.

The parade started on North Third street, promptly at one o'clock, and at the command of Charles W. Miller, grand marshal, moved south on Third street to Church, east on Church to Second, south on Second around the south and west side to Main, west on Main to Fourth, north on Fourth to Church, east on Church to Third, south on Third around the north and east side to East Main, east on East Main to school house, countermarch to the Elks Carnival street and disbanded.

The parade was over a mile long and passed in the following order: Grand Marshal Charles W. Miller, and assistant Will E. Fulton, buglers and banner bearers; exalted rulers of the lodges represented.

First Division—Columbus Battalion Band; Columbus Lodge 37, B. P. C. E.
 Second Division—Jos. D. Bader, assistant marshal; Mt. Vernon Cornet Band and Mt. Vernon Lodge of Elks, 80 in line.

Third Division—James E. Keech, assistant marshal. Hyperion Band of Newcomerstown, Coshocton Lodge, No. 32, B. P. O. E.

Fourth Division—A. L. Thomas, assistant marshal. Buckeye Band, New Philadelphia Lodge No. 510, B. P. O. E.
 Fifth Division—Charles E. Courtier, assistant marshal. Newark Lodge 331 B. P. E. E.

Sixth Division—Carnival attractions in carriages and on foot, with megaphone announcers, dog and pony show, brass band from the wild animal show.

Seventh Division—Prominent citizens in carriages.

The Convention was called to order this afternoon at three o'clock by C. T. Wright, the State President. The banner, which was won by Coshocton Lodge, will be presented to the Coshocton delegation this afternoon by Judge E. M. P. Brister, at the entrance of the Midway.

COLUMBUS

Sends a Big Crowd Over on a Special Interurban Car.

The Columbus delegation of nearly 100 came to Newark about 10:30 on a special car on the Columbus, Buckeye Lake & Newark Interurban road, and were in charge of Exalted Ruler Jas. Allen, of Columbus Lodge No. 37. They were met by the Newark reception committee and the Buckeye Band. The Battalion Band of Columbus was with the Capital city delegation and headed by both bands they were escorted around the north, west and south side of the square to the club rooms in the Oriel building, where all were made to feel at home.

The committee from Columbus that had charge of all arrangements, consisted of H. C. Wylie, chairman, Fred C. Richter and Harvey P. Junk. The marshal of the Columbus division in the parade was W. J. Dawson, esquire of Lodge 37.
 Ed H. Archer is delegate, and Chas. Brown alternate from Columbus lodge to the State convention.

CAPT. W. C. MILLER.

Thought His Brother's Troubles were Imaginary, But Found Them to be Real.

As every one in Newark knows, Attorney C. W. Miller, secretary of the Elks' Carnival and Captain W. C. Miller, the furniture dealer are twins, and the remarkable resemblance to each other has often caused hideous mistakes, not the least funny of which was the one of Wednesday afternoon. The Captain dropped into his brother's carnival headquarters; for a little chat, and during the conversation, the Secretary made the remark that he wished that the "kicks" being registered would cease. The Captain replied:

"Oh, Charley, you take everything to heart. These kicks wouldn't bother me. Take things easy, and I don't believe you will have much bother."

"Just put on this cap and go down the Carnival street, Captain," was suggested, and in a spirit of fun it was done, Captain Miller going down the street with W. H. Smith.

Dr. Woods put some of the announcements in front of the shows "next" and soon Smith and Miller were stopped with the peremptory challenge, "Say, Miller, I want you to bring around that $5 you owe me."

Captain Miller was nonplussed and attempted to explain, but the "barker" was insistent and told a boy to call an officer. At this juncture Mr. Smith said, "I will stand good for that money."

This appeased the apparently irate creditor and Mr. Smith suggested that they go to the German village and forget the incident a stein.

"Not another blank step do I go with this cap on," said the discomfited Captain, and he made a bee line for the headquarters, where all enjoyed a laugh and cigars at Captain Miller's expense.

PARADE NOTES.

John A. Chilcote carried the handsome $100 prize flag at the head of the Newark delegation.

"Brownie" was in the parade with Newark Lodge's goat, as was Mr. King of Marietta with the State Convention goat.

The New Philadelphia delegation created much favorable comment with their fine new purple and white uniforms.

All the bands marched well and played well, the plumed uniforms of the Newcomerstown men being especially attractive.

Judge E. M. P. Brister, chairman of the local reception committee, rode in the carriage with the exalted rulers.

CARNIVAL NOTES.

The balloon ascension made by Mrs. Murphy, the trained monkey, at seven o'clock Wednesday night under the direction of Thomas Leroy, general superintendent of the Bostock company, was witnessed by thousands and was a complete success. The balloon ascended gracefully to a height of about 800 feet, when the monkey made the leap with the parachute and came safely down to terra firma.

Judge E. M. P. Brister was Newark's delegate to last year's convention at Marietta, and it was through his efforts that this was chosen as the convention city for 1902.

The German village did a tremendous business Wednesday, and today it was enlarged by extending the eastern side walls.

Are you an Elk?
 Whether you are or not you will feel like one if you attend the Carnival on First street.

Of course they are the best people on earth, and the attractions at the Carnival are of the best.

The membership of Newark lodge of Elks is made up of hustling business and professional men and nothing is too good for them and their friends, and who are not their friends?

Of course you have been to the Carnival, and if not you certainly intend going. Can't afford to miss it. It is the tonic you need before beginning the active business of the fall. You will be welcome, will forget your worries, and are certain to have a good time.

The Elks are having delightful weather for their reunion and Carnival, and, of course, everybody is having a royal good time.

The prize flag to be awarded to the lodge having the largest percentage of membership present, will go to Coshocton, who made a fine showing.

The thanks of the Advocate is due the Battalion Band of Columbus for a much appreciated serenade this afternoon.

The Elks country store is in charge of that prince of good fellows, the genial Charley Courtier. Everybody knows Charley and likes him and he has done much to popularize the store. Patronize this part of the carnival as it directly benefits the local lodge. Charles Courtier, Stanley Miller and others will wait on you, and treat you right. Here you get your money's worth and a chance on the piano free.

Miss Emma O'Brien will sell you automobile tickets at the automobile booth at 10 cents each until Saturday night. Go to this booth and see the fine new machine which you may have a chance of drawing for 10 cents. It will be given to someone, "and it might as well be you."

The deaf newsboy who is selling papers on Carnival street, is being well patronized.

H. C. Wylie, who does general assignments for the Columbus Dispatch, is with the Columbus boys and will report the proceedings for his paper.

A. C. Holland, city editor of the Marion Mirror, is in attendance at the convention as delegate from Marion Lodge No. 32.

The Elks club rooms were open to newspaper men today, and the reporters were given the freedom of the building and accorded courteous treatment.

RECEIVER

Appointed for the Coxey Steel Plant at Mt. Vernon—The "General's" Last Failure.

Mt. Vernon, O., Sept. 4.—The Coxey steel plant of this city and the Coxey silica sand company of Massillon, both owned and managed by "General" J. S. Coxey of Mt. Vernon, passed into the hands of a receiver yesterday.

The appointment of the receiver was made on the application of the Fourth National bank of Cadiz, alleging that a judgment was obtained against the company in the sum of $5,041.60 on April 7, 1902, and that the money could never be obtained.

The matter was heard by Judge Coyner and James Israel, treasurer of the Mt. Vernon Bridge company, was appointed receiver of the property, giving bond in the sum of $100,000.

Coxey has expended $300,000 on the plant but has never been able to complete it. "General" Coxey is known all over the country, having led the "Commonwealth Army" to Washington a few years ago. He has been a resident of this city for two years.

NEWARK MAN

WANDERED AWAY FROM HOME TWO YEARS AGO.

Worked on a Farm in New York—His Memory Restored—Will Return to His Family.

The following dispatch sent out from Binghamton, N. Y., concerning Thomas L. Perkins, who it is alleged, wandered away from his home near this place, will be of interest:

"Thomas L. Perkins, who came to this section two years ago, and obtained employment on a farm, has suddenly remembered that he left a wife and two children near Newark, Licking county, Ohio. He awoke Monday morning and said that during the night he had a distinct recollection of leaving his family two years ago to get some coffee for breakfast. After leaving the house he could remember nothing until he found himself on the farm here and for two years his wife, children and home had been all blank. During his term here he has been thrifty and saved a sum large enough to take him back to Ohio, for which state he left yesterday."

A WOMAN'S DEVOTION

[Original.]

One summer while on a bicycle tour I stopped at evening on the banks of a lake beautifully situated and looked about for a place to spend the night. A farmer came along driving a yoke of steers, and he told me there was but one house in the neighborhood that would be agreeable to me, Captain Laurence's, but the captain was a gentleman and did not take in strangers. Mounting my wheel, I rode around the lake till I came to the house in question.

It was one of the coziest homes I have ever seen, built on an angle formed by the lake and a stream. Great overhanging trees shaded it, and the house was covered with a vine. A gentleman sat on the porch reading a magazine. I spoke to him, told him my situation, and after going inside for a moment, he consulted his wife, I suppose, he returned and invited me to be his guest till morning. I most gratefully accepted.

I sat down to a dainty supper with a family consisting of the captain, his wife, a refined woman with whose appearance I was especially struck, and several boys and girls of various ages. After the others had gone to bed the captain and I sat on a porch overhanging the lake, smoking.

"I know of a Captain Laurence," I said, "though I never saw him. You can't be he, because he went to the bad."

"Captain L. C. T. Laurence of the 4th United States artillery?"

"Yes."

"I am the man."

I was astonished. The Laurence I referred to had been one of the most promising young officers in the army, but, having been caught cheating at cards, was cut by all his comrades and was forced to resign.

"If I had known that you had ever heard of me," said Captain Laurence, "I would not have invited you to stay over night. As it is, I may make it less embarrassing for you (for I have ceased to feel embarrassed about my disgrace) by telling you how it occurred. If you believe my story, you will rest more pleasantly tonight under my roof; if not, I will have done all in my power to make you comfortable."

"My early years in the army were spent in a seacoast fortification isolated, especially in winter, from the rest of the world. To pass the time we played poker, for awhile for money, but as the excitement of gambling was distasteful to me I finally declined to play for stakes, whereupon we played for chips. This not proving interesting, we began to cheat one another, studying different methods, some of us becoming quite expert. We would play a game of 'freeze out'—that is, any man caught cheating was ruled out, the others playing on till all had been caught but one, who was the winner. We played this game incessantly one winter and found it more exciting than a game for real stakes played legitimately. At the end of the season I was declared the best cheat of the party, having won more games than any of the others."

"In the spring I was ordered to one of the principal posts in the west, in which were located the headquarters of the department. There I met the daughter of the general commanding, to whom I became engaged. Poker is common in the army and was universally played at Fort —, but my distaste for the game was so great that I declined to play. However, one evening I was standing over a poker table, and the players looked so social that I decided to take a hand.

"Half an hour passed without any change whatever in my finances. In fact, the game proved so uninteresting to me that my thoughts wandered. I was thinking of the girl I had recently won and the happiness in store for me. I was soon to be ordered to the command of an arsenal, where I would have an opportunity to use my scientific knowledge and perfect a new gun I had invented. All these matters were passing through my mind, and the game I was playing was absolutely forgotten. Suddenly I heard one of the company say:

"Captain Laurence, you are a swindler."

"All rose from the table, some looking at me with astonishment, others glancing at me. One who had been looking over my hands declared that he had not only seen me cheat once, but several times.

"I awoke to the consciousness that during my absentmindedness I had dropped into the habit formed during the previous winter. What would it avail me to assert my innocence? I was ruined.

"Gentlemen!" I began and stopped. Why make a defense that would not be believed? I covered my face with my hands, turned and left the room.

"The next morning I was cut by every officer at the post. The general sent for me and told me that to avoid a scandal which would be injurious to my corps and the army it would be necessary for me to resign, and if I did not he would be obliged to prefer charges against me of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. 'Of course,' he concluded, 'all is over between you and my daughter.'"

"I resigned my commission, but left it with my fiancée to decide upon her course after she had heard my story. She believed in my innocence and married me before I left the post. We bought this place and came here to live and to die in exile."

"Captain," I said, "my sympathy for your misfortune is only equalled by my admiration for the woman who consented to take it upon herself for your sake."

HESTER B. MERIWETHER.

FOR THE CHILDREN

A Pretty Incident.

I saw two children, the boy, I suppose, about twelve, a fine golden haired Scotch lad, with bare feet, carefully mended clothes, a worn bonnet and bright, open ruddy face, aglow with health. Clinging to him was the most fragile fairy, with long, brown ringlets of a fashion of forty years ago, great blue eyes and, alas! for her exquisite face seemed destined to blossom into a superb beauty—a bent and twisted limb and a crutch which held her up with one arm, while the strong boy steered her with the other!

"They had not yet gained the object which they sought, and I wandered after them, not from mere curiosity, but drawn by the magnetic attachment that seemed to radiate from one to the other. 'Now, Jessie,' said the boy, 'it will be all right; you just hold on.' 'But, Jock, the pennies will not buy it, I doubt.' 'Oh, never you mind; we'll see.' Then they came full in front of the object of their search. It was a dwarf rose full of bloom, and the boy with all the certainty of youth stepped forward to the old woman.

"Please, mem, d'ye ken what may be the price of yon?" Then his face fell, for the price was evidently far beyond the coppers which he held so tightly in his little hand. He just whispered to the girl; a great tear gathered in her eye and rolled slowly down the beautiful face. I stepped forward, but some one was before me, and the boy and girl passed out of that crowded show, the boy holding the plant with his protecting arm so proudly and the girl with her face shining with joy that words fail to tell.—London Figaro.

Mice as Pets.

Mice are interesting pets. They are easily tamed and are said even to be affectionate. One thing that can be said in favor of caging them is that they are accustomed to confinement and can be happy in very small quarters. Many prefer white mice, but the ordinary house mice make nice pets. If possible, catch young ones, for they are more easily trained. A cage may be made of a hardwood box with solid back and sides and a wire front. A small sliding door at one side for the use of his mischief and a back that slides up and down for the purpose of cleanliness will suggest themselves. A few rags in one corner of the cage will serve as a nest, while dry sand or sawdust scattered over the floor will make a suitable carpet. When the mice are young, feed them on bread and milk; after they are grown up they will eat almost anything. Water in a shallow dish must be constantly within their reach. They can be taught to eat out of your hand, run in and out of the cage on command and do many other things, particularly in the acrobatic line, for they are natural gymnasts.

Strike the Line Hard.

Some boy recently wrote President Roosevelt to the effect that some of his friends were quoting the president as saying to a person who had got worsted in a struggle and was inclined to complain, "Whatever else you do, don't squeal." The boy wanted to know whether the president really said this. He added that he had submitted the question to his teacher, who had assured him that the quotation could not have been genuine because the president would not have used a word like "squeal."

President Roosevelt could not, of course, contradict the teacher by admitting that he did say "squeal," so he got around it by diverting the boy's attention to another admonition and giving him the advice founded on a game of football, saying in his answer: "Do you play football? If so, here is a motto for you: Don't foul, don't flinch, strike the line hard."—American Boy.

Character Guessing.

In this game all the players sit around in a circle. The player who first thinks of an interesting character in one of Grimm's "Fairy Tales" or in "Alice in Wonderland" or in any other book that is quite familiar to all the players sits on the floor within the circle and begins to describe the character. The other children listen carefully, and the first one who thinks he has guessed the character sits on the floor beside the other and continues to describe the character. If he has guessed rightly and is correct in his description, the first player allows him to go on describing, but if he is mistaken the first player shoots him out of the game. As soon as a child thinks he has guessed the character he sits on the floor and tells what he knows of the character, and so it goes on till all the children are sitting on the floor except those who have guessed wrong, and they are all driven out of the game.

Little Tom's Way of Looking at It.

Tom had been cautioned against trying to stand on his head because his mamma said, it would give him a rush of blood to the head.

"Don't thee why," he answered, "I'm thandin' on my feets all day, an' my ting doesn't rush into 'em."—Harper's Bazar.

A Song of the Morning.

Oh, I'll not awake to worry
O'er what the night may bring
If the sun shines in my window
And I hear the robin sing
I will rise and start out bravely
If the morning's only bright,
And I'll earn the joy he's heir to
Who can say "well done" at night.
Joy is in the splendid morning
When the birds are on the wing.

Oh, I'll not awake to worry
O'er what may come ere night,
If the morning's dark and dismal
And no songsters are in sight,
I will rise and start out bravely, hoping,
That the jays I have dreamed of may
Be not so far away.
If the morn is dark I'll fondly hope the day may bring delight.

HOW MARJORY SECURED HER END

[Original.]

Marjory Kane was a schoolgirl who lived in a university town. On her way to the high school she was obliged to cross the campus, where she occasionally passed students, but none of them challenged her reverence.

The day that Marjory was graduated she was returning to her home, dressed daintily in white mull, passing, as usual, across the campus, when she met a dignified, intellectual looking man about thirty years old. He barely glanced at her, but Marjory as soon as his eyes were turned away fixed her gaze on him, and it was evident that she was very much struck with his appearance. The same evening at a school reception she saw him talking with one of the teachers and learned that he was the new professor of English literature.

When September came, Marjory was entered to pursue a select course of English literature in the woman's college connected with the university. Her continuance of any study whatever after her difficulty in getting through the high school was a surprise to her friends. Marjory gave no reason for her action, having the faculty of reticence, which is often far more valuable than learning. She lumbered along through the first year at the tail of the class and, despite Professor Genthorne's efforts to help her by leading questions, approached the June examinations with the likelihood of failure. A week before the dreaded test was to come off Professor Genthorne met her crossing the campus in the same spot where he had seen her the first time. He lifted his hat politely.

"Miss Kane," he said, "do you feel prepared to pass the examinations?" "Why do you ask a question to which you know the answer, professor?" "You mean you are not prepared?"

Marjory replied by casting down her eyes, as though she expected to be slaughtered and Professor Genthorne was to be the butcher. At any rate, that is the way the professor felt about it.

"If you will come to my lecture room at, say, 4 o'clock every afternoon between now and examination, I'll be happy to give you an hour's coaching each day."

"Thank you," said Marjory meekly, and both passed on.

The next afternoon at 4 o'clock Marjory was at the lecture room. Professor Genthorne gave her a resume of the course, so clearly drawn that it could not but be stamped upon her memory—that is, if she had had a memory—and then proceeded to put her through a preliminary examination.

"Who is called the father of English poetry?" he asked.

Marjory made no reply for some time, looking now and again at the professor with a mild reproach, then answered feebly:

"Burns."

"Oh, no. With whom did I begin just now when I spoke under the head of poetry?"

There was another grappling for ideas, during which Marjory made the professor feel that instead of trying to help her he was treating her brutally. Finally she gave a guess:

"James Whitcomb Riley."

The professor sighed. "You had better go over this division of the subject at home tonight, and I will try you again tomorrow. Perhaps you are better prepared in prose. Let me ask you a few questions on the subject of essays. Who is supposed to have been the author of the letters of Junius?"

Marjory cast her reproachful eyes upon him.

"I didn't think, professor, that you would wound me intentionally."

"I would you intentionally? My dear girl—I mean how could you so construe—"

"In asking me such a question?"

"Explain."

"Why, the author of the Junius letters was—"

"Well?"

"Junius, of course."

The professor groaned, walked to the window and stood looking out. Then he turned and saw Marjory sitting where he had left her. She was looking down at a knot in the bare floor, a point on her pretty lips, and as the professor came up she gave him a glance which said clearly, "When do you intend to cease this torture?"

"I fear," he said, "there is a lack of application."

Marjory put the corner of her handkerchief to one eye.

"You don't understand me," he went on. "You have a good mind, and the reason you do not get on—"

"You are very unkind," moaned Marjory. "I'm sure I have tried to please you."

"But, my dear, it isn't I you are to please. You are to learn for your own benefit."

Marjory covered her eyes with her handkerchief and leaned back in her chair. She knew better.

"Have I been harsh in my treatment of you?" asked the professor penitently.

No answer.

"If so, I beg that you will forgive me. I am sometimes impatient."

By this time he was standing over Marjory. He took one of her hands from her right eye, the other from her left. Suffused as they were, with tears, they looked to him like twin lakes under a storm. He bent down and kissed her.

Marjory passed the examination creditably, though no one knew how it was accomplished, and when in the following autumn her engagement was announced to Professor Genthorne everybody said:

"Great heaven, the stupidest girl in his class!"

FOR THE CHILDREN

A Truly Remarkable Dog.

One of M. Renan's dogs, called Corah, was known as the guardian angel for miles around. Where there a Monty prize for canine kindness Corah would have deserved it. Her particular mission was to amuse sick children. Whenever a child was ill at Treguer Corah was sent for. Knowing on what mission she was called, she went bounding to the house where the little sufferer lay and gambled about its bed until she caused hearty laughter.

Another duty with which she was charged was to prevent the young children of the family, of which she looked on herself as a member, going near the fire in their mother's absence. She was a sweet tempered creature, but as soon as a child she was left to watch near the fire she became a vixen. She was sent also with children living near the quay to see that they kept from the water's edge. No child confided to her guardianship ever came to harm. When I read, as I often do, of infants being badly burned or burned to death, I think it a pity that the breed of Corah was not carefully perpetuated. The master, in memory of her, called a charming little pup after her.

Corah was what is rare in dogs—very discreet. She was always asking leave (with her eyes) to do such things as, when M. Renan was suffering from illness, jumping into his bed and crouching down at his back to warm it. She was wont to sit for hours motionless on a chair looking at him, waiting for him to tell her to jump into bed.—London Truth.

The Boy Who Deceived His Teacher.

The boy who used to boast of getting the best of his teacher has been heard from. The same traits of character which tempted him to deceive his teacher into believing that he had solved his problems and completed his tasks himself led him to cheat his employer, to idle whenever his back was turned and to clip his day's work until he finally lost his position.

His lack of education, the result of cheating his teacher, has proved a perpetual handicap and has lost him many a good situation. His dishonesty, which started in the schoolroom, has grown until nobody will trust him and he has no credit or standing in his community.

As a boy he thought himself very clever in being able to dodge his lessons and impose upon his teacher, but he realizes now that the person cheated was himself. In those precious days of youth he robbed himself of pearls of great value which he never will be able to recover.

The thief of time and opportunity often thinks he is enriching himself, but he awakes one day to the truth that he is poorer and meaner for the theft.—Success.

The Sunning.

[An Indian fable.]

In the good old days a clown in the east on a visit to a city kinsman while at dinner pointed to a burning candle and asked what it was. The city man said in jest that it was a sunning, or one of the children of the sun.

The clown thought that it was something rare, so he waited for a chance and hid it in a chest of drawers close by. Soon the chest caught fire, then the curtains by its side, then the room, then the whole house.

After the flames had been put out the city man and the clown went into the burned building to see what remained. The clown turned over the embers of the chest of drawers. The city man asked what he was seeking for. The clown said: "It is in this chest that I hid the bright sunning. I wish to know if he has survived the flames."

"Alas," said the city man, who now found out the cause of all the mischief, "Never jest with fools."—Chatterbox.

Three Red Squirrels.

Three red squirrels make their home in the hollow of an elm tree at Stockbridge, Mass. A little girl, who lives near the tree, goes out to it several times a day and knocks on the trunk, and she makes a whirring noise at the same moment. Whether led to respond by the knocks or the whirring, the three squirrels come running down the trunk and, taking whatever food their little friend may offer, they skip back to the crotch of the tree. At that point there is a sort of landing, and on the landing the squirrels sit while eating the food, which is mainly in the form of nuts. "Two of them are very tame," said the little girl recently, "but one is quite wild yet."

One of the Others.

One day when the mother of twelve children had worked very hard she said to the youngest, who was called Frank:

"Frank, I wish I had a girl to do my work."

Frank said, "Why don't you trade one of us off for a girl? But not me."

Uncle Sam.

Jimmie—Gee he let me mow all the grass on their lawn this mornin'!

Over the rose flowers
I saw the golden hours
Now here, now there,
Then out of sight,
I'm everywhere,
A flash of light.

Throughout the summer day
I dream my life away,
From bud to flower,
A trickey sprite,
Now here, now there,
Then out of sight!

Alas, when day is done,
When sinks the crimson sun,
My life is o'er,
A flash of light
Dear earth good night!

THE DOCTOR WHO LEFT

[Copyright, 1902, by C. B. Lewis.]

In the old days there were a couple of hundred of us at Turkey Bend and no doctor within thirty miles of the camp. Now and then a miner fell sick and died, but we argued that his time had come and he couldn't have been saved anyhow. There was a pot of tar for cuts, a pot of grease for sprains and bruises, and if any one felt that his internal economy needed bracing up he went out and dug bearwood or gathered bark from a tree. If a miner was really ill, his tent mate nursed him as well as possible, which consisted in washing his feet, cutting his hair and asking him whether he wanted to be buried on the hillside or in the valley, but it was considered a point of honor not to fall sick. Now and then a stray doctor passed through the Bend and left a few doses of calomel or quinine behind, but we were not prepared for the surprise when a stranger sat down among us one day and announced that he was "Jim Ford, phys, surg and doc."

As far as his personal looks went, he might have been taken for a wagon driver who had got the bounce and was picking up the next best thing, but looks often belie a man in a mining camp. We rather liked the idea of a doctor coming among us, as it helped to dignify the camp, but old Joe Hurly, who had been elected as "general boss," felt it his duty to call upon the man and say:

"Look yere, stranger, ar' ye willin' to answer a few questions about yerself?"

"Oh, certainly," was the prompt reply.

"Ye claim to be a reg'lar doctor, do ye?"

"I do, sir. I am a graduate of six different colleges, and I have practiced for ten years in Illinois."

"That order pass," said old Joe, who didn't know whether the doctor graduated from a college or a woodyard.

"Got a stock of medicine with ye?"

"Enough to last for a year, sir. Here, try my elixir for general lassitude. It's my own compound, and it works like a charm."

He handed Joe a pint bottle of good whisky, with a little wintergreen rubbed on the cork to get up an odor, and after taking a swig the old man smiled all over his wrinkled face and said:

"I don't know nuthin' 'bout medicines, 'cept calomel and ointments, but I believe if I was dyin' that elixir would draw me back from the grave. I reckon ye kin go right ahead and do bizness. I thought at first that ye looked like a man who'd run a saw-mill or driv' a six mawl team, but I see I was mistaken."

What old Joe thought and said settled it with the rest of us, though we didn't accept the newcomer as literally as he did. However, Ford soon secured confidence enough to insure his being called on, if any one needed his services, so long as there was no competition in the medical profession at Turkey Bend.

His first case was that of Sam Adams, who had nothing more serious than a bilious attack and wouldn't have been laid up beyond thirty-six hours if there had been no doctor to send for. Sam's pulse was counted, his tongue inspected and his eyelids turned back, and Dr. Ford solemnly said:

"It's a case of what we call febris finitus, or water on the brain. I may possibly save you, but had you waited five seconds longer before calling me your elixir would have been driven through your diaphragm and produced a mortal fatality."

He didn't have any more of the elixir, having consumed it himself, and whether he dosed Sam with antimony or corn salve we never knew. Whatever it was, it killed the miner in about three days, and the doctor got out of it by explaining:

"He was beyond saving. He had probably inherited febris finitus from his parents, and working with the shovel and pick had gradually pushed the ventricle against the pulmonary plexus until the heart's action was stopped."

We accepted the explanation, and he was next called in to see a miner named Dobbs. The man had a touch of rheumatic fever, but his case was diagnosed as a "transcendent case of carotid artery threatening to interrupt the workings of the lateral tibia," and he was dosed accordingly. As near as we could learn, the dose was made up of Henry Clews, perfectly bald, was once traveling on a western railroad. Sitting directly behind him was a coarse looking man with a rough shock of hair the color of brick dust. Tapping Mr. Clews on the shoulder, the fellow remarked: "Guess you wasn't around when they gave out the hair."

"Oh, yes," was the answer, "but I was a trifle late, and there was nothing left but that stuff you wear, so I told them I'd rather have none."—New York Times.

HENRY CLAY AS AN ACTOR.

How the Great Lawyer Won a Hopeless Case.

An old and well known traveler, who has recently settled in Chicago, while coming in from Pewee valley the other afternoon told an interesting story about Henry Clay, the great Kentucky statesman. The story told in his youth lived in Mr. Clay's district during the time when Henry Clay was at his prime as a lawyer.

"A man was once being tried for murder," said the narrator, "and his case looked hopeless indeed. He had without any seeming provocation murdered one of his neighbors in cold blood. Not a lawyer in the county would touch the case. It looked bad enough to ruin the reputation of any barrister."

"The man as a last extremity appealed to Mr. Clay to take the case for him. Every one thought that Clay would certainly refuse, but when the celebrated lawyer looked into the matter his fighting blood was roused, and, to the great surprise of all, he accepted."

"Then came a trial the like of which I have never seen. Clay slowly carried on the case, and it looked more and more hopeless. The only ground of defense the prisoner had was that the murdered man had looked at him with such a fierce, murderous look that out of self defense he had struck first. A ripple passed through the jury at this evidence."

"The time came for Clay to make his defense. It was settled in the minds of the spectators that the man was guilty of murder in the first degree. Clay calmly proceeded, laid all the proof before them in his masterly way, then, just as he was about to conclude, he played his last and master card."

"Gentlemen of the jury," he said, assuming the fiercest, blackest look and carrying the most undying hatred in it that I have ever seen, gentlemen, if a man should look at you like this what would you do?"

"That was all he said, but that was enough. The jury was startled, and some even quailed on their seats. The judge moved uneasily on his bench. After fifteen minutes the jury filed slowly back with a 'Not guilty, your honor.' The victory was complete."

"When Clay was congratulated on his easy victory, he said:

"It was not so easy as you think. I spent days and days in my room before the mirror practicing that look. It took more hard work to give that look than to investigate the most obscure case."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

An Ancient Bible.
In the Cottonian library in England is an old manuscript copy of a part of the Bible in Latin. The London Chronicle says it was used at the coronations of English sovereigns 300 years before the "stone of destiny" was brought from Scane to Westminster by Edward I.

If this be true, the use of this Bible for the purpose dates back to the year 1000. It is a quarto of 217 leaves, containing the four gospels, and seems from the style of the writing and illuminations, which are very beautiful, to have been made about the end of the ninth century.

It narrowly escaped destruction in the fire at Ashburnham House in 1731, of which it bears evidence in its crumpled leaves and singed margins. There is some evidence that the son of Edward the Elder, Athelstan the Glorious, who was king of the West Saxons from 925 to 940, owned this Bible and gave it to the church of Dover.

Bats and Vampires.
At sunset in the forest of Guiana the bats fit from their hiding places, some taking the place of the parrots and flocking around the fruit trees, while the horrid vampires wander far and near in search of some sleeping animal, or even man, in order to obtain a meal. Cows, goats, hogs, fowls as well as game birds and quadrupeds all suffer from their attacks if not secured in well latticed pens, while the traveler must not be surprised when awaking to find blood oozing from a wound in his foot or temple.

In some places domestic animals cannot be kept at all, as they are so weakened by repeated attacks as to ultimately die of exhaustion. Fortunately, however, the vampires are not very common, and with proper care may be excluded from dwelling houses and stock pens.—Longman's Magazine.

Idea of Happiness.

Two young women, patiently of the "saleslady" persuasion, rode down Chestnut street in a crowded trolley car on a recent morning. They chatted animatedly about the merits and demerits of Will and Gas till they reached Broad street. From there to Twelfth they preserved a dreamy silence. Then one broke out with:

"I say, Ag, what would you choose if you could have everything in the world you asked for?"

"Well," said Ag slowly and musingly, "I think I'd choose enough silk dresses to last me for the next ten years. What'd you take, Sade?"

"Me?" replied Sade. "It's the dream of my life. Ag, to have all the money I'd want, so I could go to me job in a cab every morning."—Philadelphia Times.

What Will Be Worn With the Approach of Cold Weather.

Flat hats are again to be worn this winter and are quite like the shipherd's shape, which is always so popular because universally becoming.

In the matter of dress materials all those hairy stuffs resembling plush and heavier will be very largely employed. In colors green will be foremost, but the shade of blue called nationale and gray are likewise favored. Many costumes of dull red will be seen, and these will be combined with the new ecru tint.

A great deal of jet will be used, especially in trimming hats. Lace veils will be worn a good deal on beaded hats, especially those of black chintilly.

Irish lace will still be popular, and to this will be added cluny in coarser grades.

The cut shows one of the latest Parisian hats. It is trimmed with roses and knots of pale blue louisine ribbon.

BLACK EVENING GOWNS.

Creations of Net, Mousseline and Insertions of Lace.

Nothing is smarter for evening wear than a black gown. This should be of net, chiffon, mousseline de soie or some other thin material and should be made fancy with shirtings and lace insertions. Narrow velvet ribbons are also used as trimmings and applied in fanciful designs.

Very pretty dresses are made of alternate wide and narrow insertions of black chintilly or of black and white silk.

These black robes can either be mounted over black or white silk, but perhaps the most economical way is to have them free from the lining so that they can be worn over separate slips.

Silk of contrasting color, whether in medallions or bands, is much used for trimming purposes.

A dainty evening dress of black net is shown. It is very simply trimmed with narrow black velvet ribbon.

Clever Dog.

"The most remarkable dog I know," said an Albany man, "belongs to a neighbor of mine. Some time ago the dog was taught to go to a butcher's shop for a certain cut of beef that my neighbor liked. The butcher was instructed to send 70 cents' worth each time, and so the dog was given a dollar bill, which he took in his mouth and started away on his errand. Invariably the butcher would give the dog the meat and 50 cents in change, and the dog would jog back home contentedly."

"One day the butcher thought he would fool the dog, and so he gave him 20 cents instead of the correct amount. As the dog took the money in his mouth he seemed somewhat mystified. He went off, but it was not ten minutes before he returned, followed by a policeman."
